"'Holy Jukebox' is a cracker of a pop tune, with mainman James Williams a dead ringer for Michael Stipe." — tastyfanzine.org.uk

profile

Lo-fi alt-rock band Additional Moog occupy the same aural territory as the likes of Wilco, Pavement, The Band, Beck and The Jayhawks.

They made their live debut at Birmingham's Academy 3 supporting KT Tunstall and have since gone on to play venues such as Manchester's Night & Day, London's Hope & Anchor and Birmingham's Barfly.

Additional Moog originally started out as a one-man studio project influenced by the music of Simon & Garfunkel, Neil Young and the Silver Jews and the song titles of Captain Beefheart. James Williams played and recorded everything himself until finally finding three other people into both ABBA and ELO.

The original Admoog demos racked up 30,000 downloads on MP3.com. Along the way, former Pavement auxilliarist Bob Nastanovich signed up as a collaborator on an as-yet unfinished album.

The band have recently signed with U.S. indie label Lost Cat Records who have released "Holy Jukebox" as Additional Moog's first official Stateside single. The demo version of the song was recently made Track Of The Day at the respected website Garageband.com
